Story by Li Sam

Introduction

Often we forget small living things as if it doesn't matter whether they're dead or alive. And sometimes in triumph we collect for profit what once was a free spirit, without a thought for the consequences. Where life ceases to exist, copies of the past take over.

What we seldom realize is that our memories are what keep the past alive. It's there, within us, that real values of life can be brought into the future.

This is Li Sam's first story written in English, originally in the summer of 2002.

About the Author

Li Sam lives in Stockholm, Sweden, where she's learning to enjoy the challenges and pleasures of writing in English.

Her stories are special to her in many ways. Each conveys a message, but there is so much more to find in them as well. Like tales we remember from childhood, hers leave you with something to think about.
